1. Studied Poetry (10 marks)

Give an example of a memorable metaphor or simile used by a poet that you encountered in your study of English for Junior Cycle. Explain why this metaphor or simile was memorable for you.

In "The Road Not Taken" by Robert Frost, he uses a metaphor to explain life choices and their consequences. He stands at a split in a path and he must make a decision. He felt upset he "could not travel both", but knew he had to make a decision. He took the road less traveled by, a metaphor for his life as a poet, and knew his decision was final once it had been made.

This metaphor was memorable for me because it creates a striking image of a man choosing between "two roads" that "diverged in a yellow wood." It brings to mind all of the choices one makes in life and how they all change the direction of things forever. Robert Frost's use of imagery also helped make the metaphor memorable, as the idea was associated with a scene in my head.

2. Studied Novel (20 marks)

"A good story is always a journey. It is about taking the journey, the people the hero meets along the way and how they change him or her". Michael Scott

Using a novel or a film you have studied, describe a journey taken by a character in this text. This journey may be a physical journey or a journey of self-discovery.

(a) Explain, using reference to the text, what this journey involved for your chosen character. Refer to other characters they encounter on the journey.

Title of novel or film: The Outsiders

Name of author or director: S. E. Hinton

Name of character: Ponyboy Curtis

Ponyboy's journey is both a physical one and one of self-discovery. It begins when Ponyboy arrives home late and his brother hits him in frustration. He runs off and finds his friend Johnny on the streets. They walk around for a while until they are confronted by members of a rival gang. In a fight, Johnny kills one of them, saying he "had to" as they were attacking Ponyboy. The scene shows their close friendship.

With help from Dallas Winston, another member of their gang, they flee to an abandoned church in the countryside. They hide out there for a few days, in which they rarely venture from the hill the church sits on. One day, Dallas comes to check on them and takes them on an excursion. When they return, the church is on

(b) As a result of this journey, how was your chosen character changed? Did your opinion of this character change as a result of this? Explain using reference to the text.

Ponyboy is greatly changed by the journey and its consequences. The fire in the church is the defining moment of the entire book, as it ended up killing Johnny when he succumbed to his injuries. His last words were "Stay gold, Ponyboy", in reference to a poem Ponyboy told him about while they hid in the church. This line shows that Johnny and Ponyboy's friendship developed greatly on this journey and explains why Ponyboy descended into madness after Johnny's death.

My opinion of Ponyboy did change because of this. Up until then, in my eyes, he had seemed like any other boy. He lived and experienced emotions like anyone else, but was not particularly special. However, when Johnny dies and he descends into madness, going so far as to claim "Johnny's not dead", it showed me that Ponyboy experienced emotions much deeper than I had previously thought. This made me much more sympathetic towards him and made me glad when he recovered.

3. Shakespearean Drama (15 marks)

From a Shakespearean play you have studied, choose one character who struggles with elements of the world they live in and/or the other characters who live in this world.

Give an account of how your chosen character struggles in their world and what causes these struggles. Explain using suitable quotation from the text.

Title of play: The Merchant of Venice

Name of character: Jessica

Jessica from the Merchant of Venice ~~and~~ struggled with characters from the sides of both the antagonist and protagonist of the play. Her father, Shylock, the main villain of the play, does not treat her well enough in her opinion. She meets Lorenzo and tells him she wishes to "become a Christian and thy loving wife". Her father, however, ~~she~~ would never let her leave, and so she escapes and elopes with Lorenzo, taking with her much of her father's wealth.

In the world of the Christians, however, she is still mistreated. Lorenzo and he are referred to as "Lorenzo and his infidel". Antisemitism runs through the play, and even though Jessica converts, she is largely disliked.

→ discuss how she's ignored in Belmont

After her running away, her father attempts to retrieve her. He exclaims "O on my ducats! O my daughter!" She cannot return to Venice, lest he take her back, which only results in more stress for her. In conclusion, Jessica is disliked where she wants to be and ~~loved~~ ^{loved} where she does not. She struggles greatly throughout the entire play.

4. Non-Shakespearean Drama (15 marks)

From a prescribed ^{non-}Shakespearean play you have studied, choose two characters who are experiencing conflict with each other.

(a) Discuss the causes of the conflict between the two characters, using reference to a specific moment(s) from the play.

exactly state which text I wrote this before actually finishing the sentence

Alexander Hamilton and Aaron Burr constantly experience conflict with one another in "Hamilton" by Lin Manuel Miranda.

In the first major conflicts of interest they face, they are fighting in the American war of independence. Burr pitches to their general why he should be given power, but is told to "shut the door on your way out" when Hamilton arrives.

How does this make Burr feel?

Later, when they both work as lawyers, Burr grows jealous of Hamilton. Asking "why do you write like you're running out of time?", Burr is unable to comprehend Hamilton's rise of power. He grows bitter and jealous.
